To Whom it May Concern,

This letter is written in support of Charity Prater

I am the principal in several integrated organizations for which Charity has worked for several years, Babener & Associates law firm and Legaline Publications. Our law firm serves as legal counsel to leading direct selling companies in the U.S. and abroad. Legaline Publications is a publishing arm that produces online and offline education materials in the field of direct selling as well. In addition, the two organizations have sponsored more than 60 national educational conferences on direct selling over the last 25 years.

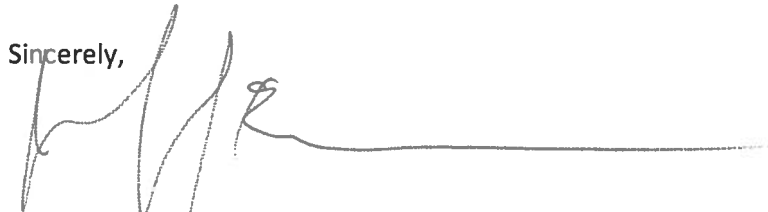

In our organization, Charity has acted as Administrative Services Manager and Communication Director. In that capacity, she has been a primary interface with hundreds of direct selling companies for our group. She has managed all our online networking strategies, including website development and maintenance, creation of content, and social networking strategies on Facebook, Twitter, blogs, YouTube, and publication on numerous third party websites.

While working for us, Charity has worked her way through both undergraduate and masters degrees. Charity is a gifted creative writer and we have looked to her to create and manage a huge volume of our published content. She is also technologically advanced and has been instrumental in the management of online activities. She has even become expert in video editing and integration to online content. In addition, she has tremendous organizational skills and has managed the administration "back office" for scores of national conferences.

I firmly believe that her creative writing, administrative, technical, and social skills would make her a very effective educator in the online educational field.

Charity has our absolute and unqualified recommendation.

Sincerely,
